OUR FOCUS

Ans Azura primarily focuses on post-war and contemporary art from key and influential artists who have defined CEE and Middle Eastern art with the diversity and engagement of their practice. The platform will be active within three main directions: online auctions, private sales, and online curated exhibitions. As international interest in artists from these regions grows, we imagine Ans Azura to become a connecting ground for Western, Eastern and Middle Eastern markets through the unveiling of a rich portfolio, inviting new audiences to participate whilst making it easily accessible throughout the world. We strive to build trustworthy online auctions, as well as bespoke private sales to enrich and offer a seamless service for buying and selling art. With the selection of the first two online auctions, our aim is to offer an accessible approach and to uncover works from seminal artists that deserve even greater visibility, such as: Magdalena Abakanowicz, Geta Brătescu, Ivan Kozarić, Mladen Stilinović, Mangelos, IRWIN, Shafic Abboud, Chaouki Choukini, Etel Adnan, Paul Guiragossian, Hussein Madi, etc. Scheduled for three times a year, the online curated exhibitions are devised by invited curators to select young artists from the two regions, whose works can be sold and bought directly on the platform. This offers sustained support for a young generation of artists and aims at coagulating a solid ground for their visibility and practice continuity.

ABOUT US

ANS AZURA is an online platform that highlights internationally-renowned, as well as lesser-seen, post-war and contemporary artworks from Central Eastern Europe and the Middle East. Ans Azura was born out of a necessity to cast a stronger light on the importance of the artists from these regions. Our aim is to gather better visibility and understanding of artists who have been overlooked by the Western market by enabling a transparent online platform that is easy to navigate. Founded by a team with long-established expertise in the field, ANS AZURA connects people to art and art to wider collections and environments. We are here to: ENTICE and SHARE knowledge, artworks, investment, assets, and community.

OUR MISSION

Our mission is to reshape the international landscape for CEE and Middle Eastern art and use our position as a tool that seeks to preserve and promote these regions and thus forge a responsible and enduring impact on the economies and ecologies of these artistic contexts.

INTRODUCTION

NADA BOULOS

Nada Boulos is an established and experienced auctioneer in Beirut Lebanon. After focusing on political science at the American University of Beirut and University Paris II, she joined Sotheby's Institute of Art in London. An intensive nine month course led her to work as an assistant to a leading auctioneer at Drouot in Paris, Mr. Guy Loudmer, whose auction house dealt mainly with modern paintings and primitive art.

Upon returning to Lebanon, Ms. Boulos founded her own auction house, building upon her expertise in Middle Eastern art and the business of auctioneering. In 1992, she became one of the pioneers to launch auctions specializing in modern and contemporary art from the Middle East. After a hiatus started in 1998, she returned to the scene in March 2004. She has been organizing two auctions each year since 2011.

I am happy to present and lead the first Middle Eastern auction sale for the newly launched digital platform, Ans Azura.

Throughout this encapsulating art selection, art collectors and enthusiasts will have the pleasure of discovering the rich artistic scene from the Middle East.

Indeed, the selection consists of works by outstanding modern and contemporary artists whose practice has shaped the art world in this region and beyond. High-selling artists such as Paul Guiragossian, Shafic Abboud, Marwan Kassab Bachi, and Hussein Madi are promoted.

Furthermore, the lots of this auction emphasize the strength of the Lebanese art scene and its heroic endurance and growth in the face of extenuating circumstances, political turmoil, and devastating crises plaguing the country. Many Lebanese artists featured have international prominence and continue to be exhibited in Lebanon and abroad. Helen El Khal, Huguette Caland, and Etel Adnan have been displayed at The Guggenheim, The Centre Georges Pompidou, The TATE, The Museum of Modern art San Francisco, and the Institut du Monde Arabe, amongst numerous places.

Yet, it is essential to highlight that significant Syrian, Iraqi, Palestinian, and Egyptian artists are also part of this auction. This effort unveils the importance of the Arab art scene and its interactive, multifaceted nature. The themes, subject matter, and aesthetics are rich, diverse, and intricate.

These artists use art as a common language representing the modern and contemporary circumstances of the Arab subject in all its complex forms.

Paul Guiragossian born in 1926 in Jerusalem, experienced the impact of exile from a very early age. In the late 1940s, the artists' family - survivors of the Armenian Genocide - settled in Lebanon, and he began teaching art in private sessions and schools. The artist was soon after discovered for his art and was introduced to his contemporaries.

In 1956 Guiragossian was granted the first prize in a painting competition, which allowed him to receive a scholarship from the Italian Government to study at the Academia di Belle Arti di Firenze. In 1962, Guiragossian landed another scholarship by the French Government to paint at Les Ateliers des Maîtres de l'École de Paris. By the mid-'60s Guiragossian became one of the most celebrated artists in Lebanon. Although the war broke out in the early '70s, his attachment to Lebanon grew more prominent, and his artworks became more colorful with messages of hope for his people. In 1989, the artist went to Paris to exhibit his works at the UNESCO and resided in the city until 1991. Between 1989 and 1991, Guiragossian produced some of his largest artworks. At the end of that year, he displayed his works at the Institut du Monde Arabe which extended into early 1992. Paul Guiragossian passed away in 1993 in Beirut.

Guiragossian's works can be found in the most discerning public and private collections worldwide including institutional presence at The British Museum. London - Musée National d'Art Moderne, Centre Pompidou. Paris - Institut du Monde Arabe. Paris, Mathaf: Arab Museum of Modern Art. Doha, Modern Art Museum of Kuwait. Kuwait, Barjeel Art Foundation. Adam Hnein was born into a family of metalworkers. He was trained as a sculptor at the Academy of Fine Art in Cairo, from which he received his degree in 1953.

After moving to Paris in 1971, he seriously started to explore the possibilities of paint. His first Parisian works - small formats on papyrus - were composed in a symbolic, hieroglyphic language, which bore witness to his ancestral heritage. His forms became progressively more open, bold and full of reference to his sculpture by virtue of their geometric juxtaposition of earth colors, animated, by lively yet subdued tonality accentuated by the third dimension of the papyrus.

Henein is the founder and Director of the annual International Sculpture Symposium in Aswan. In fact, it is for his work in sculpture that he became recognized as an artist and considered the Godfather, of Egyptian sculpture. Henein draws on his vast international experience, while maintaining a local cachet. In both his paintings and his sculptures, he has gained recognition for the use of ancient Egyptian themes and traditional materials.

Labibe (Bibi) Zogbe discovered her interest in fine arts at a young age and received her formal training in painting under the tutelage of the Bulgarian artist, Dimitrof Bogdan. She emigrated to San Juan, Argentina, at the age of sixteen to marry her betrothed, Domingo Samaja. In the decade that followed her move, she engaged in the art of literature, and she only began showing her paintings professionally in the 1930s. She became the mistress of a well-known Argentinian artist Benito Quinquela Martin and began exhibiting all over South America and Paris. In Mexico she began a friendship with Polish artist Tamara De Lempicka who painted several portraits of Zogbe. She returned to Lebanon in 1947 upon the invitation of the Lebanese government. There, she was decorated with the Lebanese Cedar-Medallion of Excellence.

The profusion of flowers in her work evokes an eternal spring through the thousand vibrantly prismatic colors that blaze vividly through the swaying lacework of intertwining branches. With a “fanfare of colors”, she depicts the bursting of life in the buds, bougainvillea in full bloom, the garlands of the coral tree, the freshness of white laurel or chrysanthemum, the flowering blossoms of the apple and the cherry tree. Writing of Bibi Zogbé, Charles Corm says: “All the flowers of the world smile on us a day and then are gone, but her flowers will never perish away for she has put into them the clear immortal fire of her heart. These are flowers which perfume now our nights and will in future times prove a witness to the grandeur of a soul sprung from our rocky soil...”

Fateh Moudaress studied at the academia di Belle arti in Rome in the 1960s and then at École Nationale Supérieure des Beaux-Arts in Paris in the 1970s. He was chosen, alongside Louay Kayali to represent Syria at the Venice Biennale in 1960.

In this 1965 painting, the artist captures a full view of the historical and spiritual village of Sadnaya, located between the mountains away from Damascus. It is home to ancient Byzantine Greek Orthodox monasteries and convents, founded by emperor Justinian I. The town with a population of around 25000, along with neighboring Maaloula remains one of the last places where Western Aramaic, the language of Jesus Christ, is spoken. For years, this region has been lieu of pilgrimage for both Muslims and Christians, being surrounded by ancient monasteries, convents and churches. In the 1960s, the Faculty of Fine Arts at the University of Damascus included in its curriculum a mandatory field trip to Maaloula and the villages. Moudaress, along with friend and fellow artist Louay Kayali were teachers at the faculty, and often accompanied students there. Thus, these holy cities became images that Moudaress painted throughout the years, showing the evolution of his style from one year to the next.

Beit Maroun in Syriac is part of a very small series of paintings in which Saliba Douaihy introduced the Syriac Alphabet while integrating the colors of the stain glass churches of his hometown. The Syriac Alphabet is one of the Semitic Abjad which shares similarities with the Phoenician and Arabic scripts. It is a writing system that was used to inscribe the Syriac language around the 1st century AD.

Syriac is a dialect of Aramaic and most religious scholars and historians agree that Jesus Christ spoke principally Galilean another dialect of the Aramaic. Douaihy whose initiation to painting began in his hometown through stain glass paintings and church paintings was always fascinated by the spiritual and religious realms.

“From the beginning, Azzawi’s interest in history, folklore, tradition, and the modernist language was bound up with an attempt to understand, and to find a way out of the human experience of injustice. He understood Iraq as the enactment of a constructed memory that is shared communally through a pain and agony that are at time also performative.”

Born in New York City in 1930, Willy Aractingi was quasi orphaned early in life. He grew up in Cairo and moved to Beirut, Lebanon in the late 1940's where he practically abandons his art to take care of his family. A few years before the Lebanese civil war, he opens a modern art gallery exhibiting the likes of Fassianos, Niki De St Phalle and Alan Davies. Inspired, he starts sketching, then painting again. By the mid 1980's, he is painting full time and in 1989 he starts illustrating the 244 fables of French poet Jean de La Fontaine which he completes seven years later in 1995.

Best known for his use of color, Aractingi was fascinated by stories, fables, and other tales told to children. In his paintings he depicts worlds inhabited by different creatures and animals bringing them to life with vibrant colors. Aractingi was in pursuit of creating his own aesthetic and humor and played with variations to obtain several versions of his propositions. Willy Aractingi described himself as a naive primitive artist. His style filled with colors and humor is often compared to the likes of Douanier Rousseau and Gauguin but with a quality considerably its own. His paintings reflect distinctive periods in his life.

NOTE

This artwork is accompanied by a certificate of authenticity by the Willy Aractingi Foundation.

His paintings reflect distinctive periods in his life. His early paintings are small, raw and innocent. His later work is more complex and bigger in size. His subjects reflect his environments and include not only the La Fontaine fables and tales but also his immediate surroundings. Landscapes from his trips to Chicago, Miami, Cairo, illustrations of Lebanese folkloric tales and representations inspired from his family life.

Willy has painted around 1500 paintings in his lifetime. Some of them are not dated however it is clear that he painted from 1973 till 1975 then stopped. He took up painting again in 1982 up until his death in 2003. This painting Le Viol is rare because of its large size for an early work but also because it is part of less than 100 paintings produced by Aractingi during that initial period.

“The rigidity of iron allows Madi to introduce acute triangles, pointed shapes and cutting edges. Thanks to its monochromatic rigor, iron underscores the way Madi’s sculpture aims to shed useless, contingent flourishes to be content with the combined sheer necessities of anatomy and geometry. Even in the entanglement of struggling bird bodies, strictness is maintained, and the obviousness of forms remains striking. Madi has always aspired to an art without concessions. He best reaches his aim in iron monochrome sculpture.”

Exploring the interaction between light and color, marked both by his Middle Eastern heritage and his European studies, Shafic Abboud's matured body of work displays forms that merge dissolving together through subtle colors. He exploited all the possibilities of oil and tempera painting to create complex shades and textures. Regardless of the colors used, his paintings always seem to emit light. A master of color, free of rules, his expressions went beyond obstacles, painting with a fluid and musical elegance. Without any evident reference, his paintings often subtly but also poignantly alluded to the tragedies and conflicts of the Near East. However, Abboud's paintings also depict the joy of life by exploring themes such as the intimacy of a room, a view from a window and the rhythm of the seasons.

Chaouki Choukini punctures wood with window-like openings, giving the impression that light pierces the work. The bewildering, yet simple, works display formal organization and rely on the effects of light on hollowed, carved, broken and polished wood. Always imposing and sophisticated, his sculptures contrast the soft curves of polished wood with the dangerous cracks and crevasses within relief labyrinths.

Chaouki Choukini is a wood sculptor. He studied at the École Supérieure des Beaux-Arts in Paris from 1967 till 1972 and then travelled to Japan in 1984. Choukini has been displayed in many exhibitions including at the Institut du Monde Arabe in 1991 as well as in 2012 in an important exhibition titled 'Le Corps Decouvert'. He won the Taylor Foundation Prize in 2010. He currently lives and works in France. Hussein Madi born in 1938 in Chebaa, is a prominent Lebanese painter, sculptor and printmaker. He is best known for his colorful works inspired by abstract design and Islamic art. He studied painting at the Lebanese Academy of Fine Arts in Beirut before moving to Rome in 1963 to continue his studies at the Accademia di Belle Arti. He then decided to settle in Rome where he lived for 22 years, learning various techniques from frescoes and mosaics to bronze sculpture. Madi has had more than sixty solo exhibitions around the world including, Institut du Monde Arabe, Paris; British Museum, London; Ueno Museum, Tokyo; Sharjah Museum, UAE and many more. Madi showcased his work at the Venice Biennale in 2003 and was awarded order of the star by the Italian government during the same year.

“Madi never seeks a simple photographic of nature in his paintings and his numerous sculptures. While remaining identifiable his objects are always stylized. Starting with exaggerating a woman’s angles and curves, Madi stretches her body to the limit of the abstract. His birds become ideograms. Always attracted to vivid hues, Madi compresses space and marks contours in black or white. Simplified forms approach pure geometry, a hint of abstraction derived more from geometric organization of Islamic art than from Western abstraction. In fact, Madi combines a mastery of Western techniques with ancient Middle Eastern heritage and symbolism, and Arabic calligraphy.”

"There is a dynamism that takes over the work of Guiragossian throughout this highly prolific period starting in the early 1960s and going into the 1970s which sees his earlier constellations of human figures, slowly but confidently, transform from clusters of huddled geometric formations, set within traces of recognizable physical spaces where the rules of perspective still more or less apply, to bold sweeping brushstrokes and paint batches, which while still marinating some anthropomorphic features, increasingly move away from representation and emerge from an abstract, often monochromatic void."

“Green Sea is from our treasured private collection. One summer evening, while conversing with our close friends, Helen and Yusuf Khal at Gallery One, Helen spoke passionately about how Mediterranean light inspired and influenced her art. A few weeks later, over drinks at her studio, we were instantly captivated by the luminous tranquility of a painting she was working on. Luckily, upon completion, we were able to purchase it, and, over the years, Helen’s green and blue seascape has brought extraordinary serenity and pleasure to our lives.”

Helen Khal began painting at the age of 21. Initially, she had planned on becoming a writer as she was an avid reader and passionate about literature. However, her plans changed after spending six months in a sanatorium recovering from tuberculosis at the age of 22. During her recovery, Khal took on drawing and painting, then enrolled at weekly afternoon art classes at the Baum Art School in her hometown.

In 1946, Khal travelled back to Lebanon for the first time, and began her studies at the Lebanese Academy of Fine Arts. In 1949, she moved to New York to continue her studies at the Art Students League and in 1963, came back to Beirut to establish and direct Lebanon's first permanent art gallery, Gallery One. She developed a unique painting style and became well-known for her ability to use color in an emotive way; meditative, colorful abstractions arguably reflect her signature style of geometrical forms such as circles, rectangles and squares. Her abstract canvases are composed of several basic motifs or combinations of them: horizontal bars, circles, rectangles or squares, vertical accumulations of rectangles, or free-floating oval shapes that move diagonally across the surface. In focusing on these variations, she intends no actual representation or symbolism; she uses color to elicit a subjective response that moves the viewer's vision beyond the canvas and creates a personal alternate world.

Shafic Abboud was born in 1926 in Mhaite, Lebanon spending his childhood between the mountainous region of his birthplace and the city, Beirut. He abandons his engineering studies to pursue a career in art and enrolls at the Academie Libanaise des Beaux Arts in 1945. As a young passionate artist, he was taken by the artistic styles of his professors Cesar Gemayel, Fernando Manetti and Georges Cyr; influential painters who marked the upcoming generation of artists in Lebanon.

In 1947 he makes his way to Paris for the first time and audits the classes of L'École des Beaux Art while also visiting the studios of the neo-cubist artists, Fernand Leger, André Lhote and Othon Friesz. After two years in Paris, he makes his way back to Lebanon and with the help of his former professor Georges Cyr, Abboud presents his first solo exhibition in Beirut at the Centre Culturel Français. He presented figurative paintings depicting folkloric culture, inspired by calligraphy and Persian miniatures, conservatively revealing his Parisian abstract influence.

In 1951, Abboud travels back to Paris where he works three jobs in order to sustain his life, working as a construction painter, a server and a guide at the Louvre. The Lebanese government grants him a scholarship of three years allowing him to officially enroll at the Academie des Beaux Arts in Paris, refining his skills in painting, lithography, and engraving. After 1955, Abboud's successful artistic career unveils. He participates in a myriad of exhibitions across Europe and Lebanon. In 1959, he becomes the first Lebanese artist to exhibit at the Paris Biennale. The artist began spending more time in Lebanon, teaching and exhibiting from 1970 until the start of the civil war in 1975. In 1978 he decides to move to Paris, and throughout the 1980s, Abboud continued to produce and exhibit artworks around Europe. In 1994, after an absence of sixteen years, Galerie Janine Rubeiz organized a solo show for Abboud in Beirut. Abboud passed away in Paris in 2004 and was buried, per his wishes, in his native village in Mount Lebanon.

A manifesto of freedom and color, Abboud's paintings bridge the art worlds of Europe and the Middle East. Inspired by the Lebanese landscapes and his childhood memories, the artist's practice progressed over time from a poetic Lebanese figuration towards an oeuvre which combines the former with a lyrical Parisian abstraction. His practice ultimately evolved to a delicate Abboudian Transfiguration composed of traditional and modern techniques while also incorporating pagan and sacred themes.

In the agreements made with Faris Gallery at the beginning of the 1980s between Shafic and Waddah Faris, several individual exhibitions were planned with a commitment from the gallery to buy a certain number of works in pre-sale. This was a great opportunity for Abboud because it allowed him to work in very large formats and preserve the quality of the support and the colors. He was therefore able to produce museum quality artworks. It is within this framework that Shafic Abboud proposed several themes to Waddah including The Chambre and The Nights.

Shafic Abboud is a painter of the intimate, the bedroom is therefore an ideal place to capture the essence of the intimate through the history that unfolds within and the bodies that occupy it. He was also interested by the multiplicity of its plans, walls, floor and ceiling, which also acted as guidelines and directive surfaces. Christine Abboud, the artists' daughter, notes: "Regarding the Grande Chambre, it is important not to forget the Petites Chambres, which were worked on at the same time or used as preparatory work. In the studio notebooks, Abboud wrote about the "Grande Chambre n°16": "Made entirely with oil paint like the last Grande Chambre 10, it is very close to the Petite Chambre". To each "Grande Chambre n°X" often corresponded a preparatory work called "Petite Chambre n°X". Petite Chambre 16 was produced between March-April 1987 and the Grande Chambre 16 was produced shortly after that before the exhibition in November 1987.'

"I am constantly struck by the amazing optimism of her paintings."

Etel Adnan is widely recognized as one of the foremost authors, poets and playwrights of her generation. Widely known for her literary work, she fluidly moves between the disciplines of writing and art.

Etel Adnan's style has not changed drastically since the 1960s, when she first started painting at the age of thirty. She has always been painting almost the same subject - nature - with the same formats - small canvases - and the same tools - palette knife on paint. Back then, her method of painting was pulling down her strokes with the palette knife from the top of her canvas. She developed the palette knife method when she met artist Ann O'Hanlon (wife of Richard O'Hanlon, an artist who had apprenticed with Diego Riviera). After being questioned by O'Hanlon as to why she did not paint, Adnan picked up a palette knife that was lying around by chance, placed the canvas on the table and worked on them as if she were writing. Simone Fattal later wrote that O'Hanlon was so shocked by the "spontaneous perfection" of Adnan that she quit her job at the Dominican College and devoted herself to Buddhism.

As an abstract painter, Adnan focuses on strong lines and squares, her recurrent point of reference in her earlier paintings, which are almost always small in size. Her direct, straight-forward paint strokes and lucid swaths of color make her devoted investigation of painting truly fresh, poetic and unpretentious. Her paintings have reoccurring themes from nature, showing that there is a plethora of ways to express the beauty of the sea, mountain ranges, and fields. Adnan depicts almost the same image in all her paintings, with a marriage of different colors that pull you in. Absolute browns balanced with bright yellows, holding a heavy erotic tension. Her paintings are also, although little and seemingly decorative, talismans of energy, in a sense playing the role that icons used to play for people who believed. Exemplifying how Great Art and simple perfection can generate feelings and emotions.

By the time Carolyn Chritstov-Bakargiev, director of Documenta 13, exhibited around forty of Adnan's paintings in 2012, a "full scale revival of Adnan as an artist was in the works". From then onwards, the world discovered the magic of Etel Adnan. This included many international galleries like White Cube in London and Galerie Lelong in Paris. A flow of major international group exhibitions followed. The New Museum featured her in a 2014 exhibition of art from the Arab world, while the Whitney Museum of American art included her in its biennial the same year. Adnan's work is now present in major institutions such as the Tate Britain, London, British Museum, London; Centre Pompidou, Paris; Institut du Monde Arabe, Paris; National Museum of Women in the Arts, Washington, D.C.; M+, Hong Kong, China; Museum of Modern Art, New York; Museum of Modern Art, Tunis; Whitney Museum of American Art, New York; San Francisco Museum of Modern Art, San Francisco; Kunstsammlung NRW, Düsseldorf; Royal Jordanian Museum, Amman; LAM, Lille, Villeneuve-d'Ascq; Guggeneheim, Abu Dhabi; Mathaf, Qatar; Sursock Museum, Beirut; Kunsthaus Zurich

'The artist is, always and forever, seeking his personality. He seeks his personality in the line, in the idea. He seeks his distinct personality in realism, and he has his own specific colors, his own specific rhythm, and his own specific vision of his world: this allows him to find himself more and more, and to produce earnest artistic work.'

We can see that the artist changes and develops according to his unique personality. Each year, or each month, or each day, he discovers a new color that he never knew before. And he might find a new line, a new form, or a new idea, as long as his obsession remains that of following and renewing the path of universal art.'

'Anyone visiting an exhibition by Marwan should by now expect to see further variations on the same theme: heads, or better faces – physiognomies indissolubly woven into the pictorial surface that seem to look at the viewer from an indeterminate depth. For almost forty years Marwan has been developing this facial landscapes of his early work to the steeply towering ecstatically vibrating monumental heads to double-head configurations, in which a cool, greenish chord has recently begun to contrast and complement the predominantly warm, magenta-brown bias of his colouration. In the course of this development, the distanced fixation of the viewer by a pair of eyes from the far upper back has given way to a single, impenetrably veiled gaze.'

Marwan Kassab Bachi, commonly known as 'Marwan', was born in Damascus to a wealthy, local family. He studied Arabic Literature at the University of Damascus from 1955 – 1957 and later went on to study in Berlin at the Hochschule der Bildende Künste completing his training in painting under the supervision of the artist Hann Trier. In 1973 he moved to Paris and completed a formative scholarship at La Cité Internationale des Arts. While his artistic schooling helped form his aesthetic sensibilities, the poetic language that emanates from his paintings were a result of his knowledge and affinity to Arabic Literature. Marwan's artworks did not allude directly to Arabic stylistic influences or traditions, however the essence and life force of his oeuvre was born from a psyche still connected to his birthplace.

Between 1977 and 2004 Marwan worked at the Hochschule der Bildende Künste as a professor. In 2003 Marwan established a Summer Academy at the Darat al-Funun Foundation in Amman. He supervised workshops joined by several artists including Ayman Baalbaki, Tagreed Darghouth and Serwan Baran. Due to Marwan's vast involvement within the Berlin and Arab art scenes he was asked to join the Akademie der Künste in 1994, becoming the first Arab member of this institution. Marwan joined the European art movement 'New Figuration' which denounced the social and political realities from a narrative perspective. Highly inspired by Expressionism, the artist targeted the character of the person in his oeuvre. He believed in expressing life's complexity through the illustration of faces.

Painting almost exclusively figures, Marwan altered their proportions and placed an emphasis on the energy stemming from the facial expressions executing them with a clear delineation. Through their detailed facial expressions his figures question the human condition, shining a light on the psychological impact on a generation of individuals living through a period of instability and anxiety. A humanist, Marwan integrated a large part of subjectivity in his art as if he was displaying his own relationship with the planet. Marwan initially modelled the faces after himself and gradually flattened them turning them into a sort of landscape stretching unto the entire surface of the composition. Progressively, Marwan abstracted and enlarged the heads, superimposing layers of thick paint creating a three-dimensional effect. He exaggerated the proportions of some features. The figure or head whose skin looks mutilated stares at the viewer thus sharing his suffering and uncertainties much like the painting Untitled.

Saliba Douaihy, one of Lebanon's twentieth century masters, was born in the picturesque town of Ehden, North of Lebanon. Encouraged to develop his talent at an early age, Douaihy studied under the tutelage of prolific classical painter Habib Srouf.

Douaihy was an international artist, who learned and worked in cosmopolitan cities such as New York and Paris, thanks to a grant from the Lebanese Government. During his time in New York, Douaihy lived in a studio above a Maronite Church, it was then that his practice developed most. He became part of the school of New York, meeting and befriending Post-War masters such as Mark Rothko, Hans Hoffman, Ad Reinhardt and many more.

Douaihy started deconstructing the architectural forms of landscapes and representing his surroundings in a cubist-like style. Breaking away from traditional Lebanese painting, he began to explore into the world of simplification. He often used primary colors such as blues, reds, and yellows and created simple shapes to represent mountains, valleys, villages, buildings, and other landscapes. After taking a course on aesthetics, he became infatuated with the writings of Emmanuel Kant, aspiring to reach the "sublime" through a more formalist abstract method. After having studied Kant and throughout the 1960's the paintings he produced were a result of the artists search for the ultimate simplification of both form and color.

Throughout his lifespan, Douaihy, much like Picasso, was able to completely change his body of work from strictly academic to a more Modern, abstract one. Saliba Douaihy spent time between London and Paris before passing away in 1994 in New York. Since the mid-1960s, Douaihy's paintings have been exhibited in institutions including the Museum of Modern Art and the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum in New York and are featured in public and private collections around the world including Mathaf in Doha.

Huguette El-Khoury spent much of her early adulthood taking care of her father as he aged. As the daughter of the first president of the Lebanese Republic, Bechara el-Khoury, she grew up with the pressure of being part of a politically and socially engaged family and found it difficult to finding her own identity.

Only after he died, in 1964, did she start her studies at the American University of Beirut and begin to paint seriously. She majored in fine arts and graduated in 1968. In pre-war Beirut, she moved in cosmopolitan artistic circles and became something of a symbol of female emancipation in the Arab world. But it was during her time in Paris that her sense of liberation began to appear in her work. After her first exhibition in Beirut in 1970, Caland she decided to leave her husband and children and move to Paris. Experiencing a new city freed her from the responsibilities and opinions imposed on her first as a politician's daughter but also as a wife, and mother. While in in Paris, Caland led a genuinely bohemian life.

"The lines in her drawings became thinner, more sophisticated," states Brigitte Caland. "It was a different moment of her life. The colors changed. She did a lot of erotic works she would not have done in Lebanon. It freed her, being in Paris."

Among her creations were elaborately designed high-end caftans. She was wearing one in Paris one day in 1978 when she entered Pierre Cardin's boutique "I love what you're wearing," the celebrated fashion designer told Ms. Caland, her daughter recalled. "Why don't we do a collection together?" And so, they did. True to form, Ms. Caland designed some with breasts, a belly button and pubic hair on the front and buttocks on the back. In her mid-50s — after the death of her lover, the Romanian sculptor George Apostu, in 1986 in Paris — she moved to Los Angeles to be near her children.

Much like her childhood home, her Los Angeles studio was open to any friends and visitors, and she often hosted prominent artists. The artist remained in California until 2013 when she returned to Beirut to say goodbye to her dying husband. Caland's recent work often makes use of mixed media like in the work The Purple One. Using oils and ink to evoke the craftsmanship and feel of a carpet, or tapestry, using lines that appear like patchwork and stitching. Though they resemble textiles, they are not devoid of human presence and their content bears relation to the artist's personal life.

Caland's works can be found in collections around to world including the LACMA, Los Angeles, the Armand Hammer Museum, USA, The British Museum, London, UK, the Tate, UK, the Metropolitan Art Museum New York, USA, the San Diego Museum of Art, USA, the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, USA, the Frederick R. Nadia Saikali is a contemporary painter whose works have received numerous awards including the Sursock Museum prize in 1968 and the Carreras competition in London in 1967. Her work has been featured in several exhibitions at key galleries and museums, including the Espace Claude Lemand and the Galerie Claude Lemand.

“Nadia’s working habits, the paint-spattered and disordered atmosphere of her studio, could well fit into an ideal scenario of “the bohemian artist at work.” She uses no easel, paints either on the floor or against a wall. Canvases, large and small, surround her; pots and tubes of paints, brushes knives, rags clutter the floor. She moves through this confusion of materials with the sure swift grace of an antelope, and when she paints, her whole body, the body of a dancer, moves into action; the gesture which is expressed in paint flows from a total arm and torso movement, spontaneous and yet controlled. She says, “I need to move in a rhythmic way, a total way. There has always been this kind of movement in my work.”

Yvette Achkar was born in Sao Paolo, Brazil in 1928. Her first love was music and she had aimed to become a professional pianist. After being rejected from the Lebanese National Conservatory, Achkar shifted her focus to visual arts. She enrolled at the Académie Libanaise des Beaux-Arts and became a member associated with a group of young artists who considered themselves pioneers, a new generation that was determined to break with the artistic traditions of the past and move into new, freer forms of expression.

Achkar's career took off after she graduated from ALBA when she went to Paris to study on a scholarship granted by the French government. After concluding her studies, Achkar returned to Lebanon, where she taught painting at ALBA and the National Institute of Fine Arts of the Lebanese University from 1966 to 1988. Achkar was trained by Fernando Manetti and influenced by Georges Cyr, however, developed a personal style in line with abstract expressionism, characterized by the use of bold colors and strident yet delicate lines to convey a sense of the artist's emotions and inner self.

"When she paints, she is not alone, she responds to the requirements of the materials and colors that have a personality and a presence of their own. Painting responds to a desire for aesthetics. In the foundation of this relationship each detail is in dialogue with the whole as well as with a part, resembling a musical composition."

Alfred Basbous is a modernist sculptor that was a central figure in the development and advancement of modernism in the Middle East during the latter part of the twentieth century. With innate talent and rigorous artistic training, he was the recipient of a scholarship from the French government in 1960 and was a student of renowned French sculptor René Collamarini at L'École Nationale des Beaux-Arts in Paris.

*Basbous is a part of an essential movement that shaped post-war, modern approaches to sculpture. The spirit of avant-gardism of the time matched the topics and aesthetics which were pertinent to the Middle East. Basbous' aesthetic philosophy is grounded in the simplicity of form – shape, movement and line. His abstracted figures are handled much in the same way as Constantin Brancusi, Henry Moore and Jean Arp. Celebrating the human form is a central theme within his oeuvre. Basbous was particularly adept at articulating his appreciation for the female figure into material form like in the work Tendresse.*

Elie Kanaan showed a particular expressive style from a young age. He was able to receive a fellowship to Paris to the Free Academy of the Grande Chaumière after receiving the first prize in painting at the Salon du Printemps in 1957 and the UNESCO prize in 1958. After his time in Paris, he returns to Lebanon and began making use of Mediterranean colors in his work. He was taken by light and often used contrasting reds, blues, and yellows that he layered and masterfully balanced to create a sensation of motion and a tension between the pigments. Between 1963 and 1974, he taught drawing and painting at the College Notre-Dame de Jamhour, the Lebanese University, and the Académie Libanaise des Beaux-Arts (ALBA).

Serwan Baran's paintings center on the turbulent history of his native Iraq. Baran has widely exhibited in the Middle East and North Africa, and in 2019 he was the first solo artist to represent Iraq at the Venice Biennale. While studying fine art at the University of Babylon, Baran became fascinated by the ancient city's legendary ruins, mythology, and visual culture, which stood in stark contrast to modern day Iraq's political instability and decades of warfare. Baran, who served as a soldier for his country, often comments on his experiences in the military and Iraq's present day political conflicts in his work. He depicts harrowing scenes of fellow soldiers facing their final moments using a gestural, expressionistic style and an earthy color palette drawn from the landscape of his homeland

Sabhan Adam is a self-taught artist who creates works in relative isolation from the art world. A prolific artist, he has built up his career in both traditional and independent ways through exhibiting with galleries but also independently marketing and self-funding work and publications. Adam has exhibited at institutions such as the Uffizi Gallery, the Institut du Monde Arabe in Paris and the Venice Biennale. His work has been acquired by the British Museum, Jalanbo Collection, Barjeel Art Foundation, and is in many private collections.

Challenging notions of beauty and ugliness, Sabhan Adam paints portraits of misshapen creatures often clothed in glamorous attire against plain backgrounds. While distorted and monstrous, the figures hold a complex set of emotions based on Adam's own psychology. He states: "The figures I paint have so many things in common with me – they look like me, they have the same head and the same Asian eyes as me. I draw myself with everything that exists inside – the sadness, the misery, the shocking things I have faced, the isolation, and the feeling of not belonging to this world."

Reflecting his outsider artist temperament, Sabhan says that his work is ultimately influenced by his experiences and that "knowledge comes from the truth, not through being influenced by someone's work." He emphasises that his human creations are attached to the "pain, fear and phobia which our society constantly suffers from." Ruminating on his own suffering, he writes: "I like people and I love nature but when there is so much pain inside of you and around you it's impossible to draw just birds and flowers."

Anas Albraehe is a Beirut-based artist who primarily works in painting and theatre performance. He received a bachelor's degree in painting and drawing in 2014 from the Fine Arts University of Damascus, Syria. After the onset of war in Syria, he relocated to Lebanon and obtained an MA in Psychology and Art Therapy from the Lebanese University in 2015.

'Albraehe observes, and in the medium of painting, represents the men who share his room, according to shift, when sleep has fallen upon them. He includes traces of their waking life within the frame. His subjects are laborers, men displaced by war, and who find no other refuge but under the temporary spell of sleep. Albraehe's painting is warm, bright and intimate. It seeks to capture these men's vulnerability, their humanity. Yet the traces that infiltrate from the edges of the frame are reminders of the increasing inseparability between sleep and wakefulness – in other words: the neglected politics of sleep.'

Tagreed Darghouth is a Lebanese painter. She obtained a degree in Fine Arts from the Lebanese University in Beirut, as well as a diploma in Art Education. She participated in the Ayloul Summer Academy at Darat Al-Funun in Amman in 2000 and 2001, which was led by the Syrian-German artist Marwan Kassab Bachi. She then went on to study Space Art at the Ecole Nationale Supérieure des Arts Décoratifs in Paris.

*In painting Darghouth's body of work reflects on the feebleness of humanity by tackling themes such as popular culture and socio-political issues. Darghouth delves into universal concerns in an abstract expressionist style by addressing mortality, violence, and war through the painting of skulls and nuclear explosions. Since 2010 she has been portraying human skulls against ornamental backgrounds made of roses, suns, stars, and bunnies to bring attention to the morbidity in their contrast. This preoccupation with the notion of 'Memento mori' is clearly expanded on in the work Untitled, a timeless and universal concern that transcends time and space.*

Darghouth has had several solo and group exhibitions around the world, in Al-Sharjah, Amman, Beirut, Brussels, Buenos Aires, Doha, Dubai, Jordan, Istanbul, London, Miami, Munich, New York, Paris, and Singapore. She has also received several prizes, including the 2nd Prize at the Ayloul Summer Academy exhibition in Darat Al-Funun in Amman in 2000, the 1st prize at the cm3 exhibition in Cité International Universitaire de Paris in 2003, and the Boghossian prize for a young Lebanese artist in the category of painting in 2012. She currently lives and works in Beirut, Lebanon.

Nadia Safieddine is a Beirut-based artist. She received a BFA in painting from the Institute of Fine Arts at the Lebanese University in 1997.

Nadia Safieddine diversifies the subject matter of her work by shifting the focus from lugubrious, distorted, and barely visible figures to more abstracted landscapes. Portraits and nudes still make up half of the works on display, but the move to the non-pictorial intimates that the three categories of painting are not separate genres in the classical sense. Painted with a technique of impasto, all of Safieddine's work is enmeshed in the dialectical relationship between abstract expressionism and figuration.

Ayman Baalbaki is one of the most prominent living Lebanese contemporary visual artists. He received his diploma in fine arts from the Lebanese Public University in Beirut in 1998 and then completed a year-long mandatory military service before moving to Paris in 2000, where he studied at the École Nationale des Arts Décoratifs from 2000 to 2002 and received his D.E.A from the Université Paris VIII in 2003.

In his body of work, the artist faces the past, tackling the war's distressing events with cynicism, emphasizing the absurdity of war. Baalbaki's oeuvre tackles themes such as loss, displacement, collective memory, and identity. The artist is known to depict large concrete bullet-riddled buildings in gradual collapse. Baalbaki's buildings usually occupy the center of his painting appearing like emblems of disaster. Baalbaki has painted several civil war landmarks that are now covered with shrapnel and bullets such as the Burj al Murr Tower, the Holiday Inn Hotel, the Barakat Sniper Building and the Egg building. These paintings serve as a commemoration but also take on a personal and a political dimension. He lightens the mood of his paintings with ornate backgrounds painted in alternating palettes of blue, green, yellow, or pink. Sometimes he fixes readymade floral fabrics to the canvas before he starts painting.

Zena Assi was born in Lebanon, in 1974. She graduated from l'Academie Libanaise des Beaux Arts, worked in advertising and taught in several universities.

Her current work is inspired by the relations and conflicts between the individual and his spatial environment, society and its surroundings. The artist utilises various supports and mediums to document and explore the social and cultural changes and record the urban contemporary environment's imprint as well as the impact of society's ideologies and political tendencies. New Blood is a great example of the struggles, worries and requirements of the contemporary Arab woman living in the midst of instability and conflict.

Assi's pieces are part of different public as well as private collections including the Academie Libanaise des beaux Arts, Beirut; Barjeel Art Foundation, Sharjah; Institut du Monde Arabe, Paris. Her work has also won prizes including the Sunny Dupree Family Award for a Woman Artist at the 2020 Summer Exhibition at the Royal Academy, London, 2020; the Rosemary & Co Award at the SWA show, London, 2018; the Special Jury Prize of the XXIX of the Autumn Salon of the Sursock Museum, Beirut, 2009.

Abdul Rahman Katanani, is a Palestinian contemporary visual artist, that was born in 1983 in the Sabra refugee camp in Beirut, Lebanon. In 1948 after the Nakba, his grandparents escaped their hometown Jaffa, Palestine, and settled in a refugee camp in Beirut. From the age of eight, until college, Katanani worked alongside his father, a carpenter helping him install roofs made of corrugated zinc-metal sheets on top of the concrete cubicles of refugees. He received his diploma in Fine Arts from the Lebanese University in Beirut in 2007 and an MFA in 2012 on Palestinian contemporary art. He went on to perform several artists residencies at La Cite des Arts foundation in Paris in 2012, 2013 and 2016 which helped shape his practice.

*Katanani believes in cultural interactions and crossing boundaries through art. In his body of work, the artist tackles themes such as displacement, borders, trespassing, and freedom. Palestine is omnipresent in his work and has become an allegory for all the displaced in the world. He is well known for his collection of assemblages incorporating zinc metal sheets, pre-used garments, kitchen utensils, and laundry pegs; materials collected from the refugee camp. The materials seem like scraps, but, for Katanani, they symbolise the survival kit of a refugee: shelter, food, and clothing. Inspired by the children of the camp who would make toys from trash, he took pictures of them then enlarged the figures' silhouettes and cut them in corrugated zinc metal sheets. In the work Girl Chasing Pigeons despite the seemingly heavy material both in physical and symbolic terms the artist succeeds in depicting a lightness through the innocence of a child playing around chasing pigeons.*

*In 2019, Katanani received a French passport and since then he lives between Paris and Beirut. He has had solo and group exhibitions in Abu Dhabi, Beirut, Paris, London, Kuala Lumpur, Doha, Brussels, Rome, Geneva, Manama, Marseilles, Munich, Washington DC. In 2013, French writer and filmmaker Christophe Donner produced a feature film, entitled Le Lanceur de Pierres, based on Katanani's experience. In 2016, Katanani was nominated for the commitment prize at YIA Art Fair in Paris, and in 2008 and 2009 he received prizes from the Sursock Museum in Beirut.*

“Jamil Molaeb looks at themes in color. Each color holds a grave responsibility to keep the composition together, forming one cohesive instance that is in fact a compilation of many moments recreated on a flat plane. It is the selection of colors in his works that carries signification, while at the same time allowing the viewer to feel the progression of time and the artist’s process within the boundaries of the canvas.”

Ahmad Bazoun, Gallery Magazine.

Oussama Baalbaki's subject matter and style stem from a monochromatic expressionist realism centered on nature and human figure. In this perspective, they become the stage of a reality that swings between fact and illusion, an intuitional painting that emerges out of the figurative expression and wraps itself in the cloak of literalism.

Oussama Baalbaki received his BFA from the Institute of Fine Arts, Lebanese University in 2002. He has participated in numerous group exhibitions in a wide array of institutions in Lebanon, including the Sursock Museum, and abroad in the cities of Abu Dhabi, Dubai, London, Miami, Munich, New York, and Washington. Baalbaki lives and works in Beirut.

Artist, philosopher and musician Omar El Nagdi was born in Cairo in 1931. Upon graduating from the Faculty of Fine Arts of the Helwan University in Cairo, El Nagdi continued his training in Russia, Italy and eventually graduated from the Academia del Bello Arte in Venice in 1965. During his travels, El Nagdi encountered Avant-Grade master Giorgio de Chirico, who mentored and, undoubtedly, influenced him. He then became part of the art scene in Rome and Venice, and eventually exhibited in group shows alongside Picasso in 1960, and Dali in 1961. Omar El Nagdi's body of work is a combination of his cultural history, embodying pharaonic and Islamic iconography with elements of cultures that he encountered in rural Egypt. The Harp Player is an exceptional example of that mixture, showcasing the Egyptian artist's mastery of color, culture and poetry.

Safwan Dahoul was initially trained by leading modernists at the Faculty of Fine Arts, University of Damascus before traveling to Belgium, where he earned a doctorate from the Higher Institute of Plastic Arts in Mons.

In May 2008, Safwan lost Nawar, his college sweetheart and wife of 20 years to cancer. The first five months of the year were dedicated to her battle against this terrible disease with its ups and downs while preparing for his solo exhibition at Ayyam Gallery, Damascus. For over twenty years, Syrian artist Safwan Dahoul has frequently used just a single word to title his paintings: "Dream." Reflecting an oeuvre mostly comprised of variations of an enigmatic theme, the title acts to connect works that can be grouped as an uninterrupted series.

The Ligne de Vie artworks appeared in March 2020, at the start of confinement due to the Covid-19 pandemic. By being a source of positive emotions through their liberating dynamic and their bright turquoise or blue colors, they are a reaction themes such as confinement, morbidity and death. These free flow lines are a hymn to Life. The painting Line of Hope for Beirut was created following the terrible explosion of August 2020, which destroyed part of the city. From the black background springs, a continuous very luminous turquoise line whose intricacies draw a triangular shape that suggests that of the cedar, the symbol of Lebanon.

Najia Mehadji lives and works between Paris, France and Essaouira, Morocco. By the 1970s, Mehadji's oeuvre was already marked by a "tangible abstraction" that derived simultaneously from contemporary music and from her work on the body in the experimental environment of the Université de Paris VIII. Since in the 1980s, the work of Naja Mehadji embodied painting and other features of Islamic art such as the cupola, the polygon, flowers, arabesques and calligraphy, bringing forth new concepts and new forms within which the artist conceived her own unique style.

Najia Mehadji is one of the best-known Moroccan artists on the international art scene. Her pieces are held in many collections, including those of Société Générale, Morocco; Attijariwafa Bank, Morocco; MACAAL, Morocco; Centre Georges Pompidou, France; Institut du Monde Arabe, France; Musée des Beaux-Arts de Caen, France; Musée des Beaux-Arts de Amman, Jordan.

“The imagery of popular entertainment has been brilliantly appropriated by the renowned Egyptian artist Chant Avedissian, whose images of the great stars are made with stencils based on old photographs. His identification with Arab nationalism became more intense in 1991, as he powerlessly watched the events of the Gulf War unfold. This led to the creation of more than two hundred nostalgic images of aspects of Egyptian culture, in which the country’s singers and actors played an important role.”

Antar, who has conducted documentaries for news channel Al-Arabiya, is best known for his documentary photographs, using expired negatives and collections of archival images as part of his body of work, defying technology and modern photography's limitations. Thus, his work becomes one of deep engagement with the history and theoretical discussion of the medium of photography.

In this work, Antar captures the aftermath of a devastated Beirut moments after the August 4th, 2020 blast. The infamous Silo, which has become an emblem of the horrific incident, is shown at the forefront. He employs his trademark photography method of used tape, giving even more depth and darkness to the scene. With his method, Antar makes the viewer interact with geographies and proportionalities but also with emotions, memories and depth.

Ziad Antar (b.1978, Saida, Lebanon) is a filmmaker and photographer with a degree in Agricultural Engineering from the American University of Beirut in 2001 and a diploma from the École des Beaux-Arts in Paris. Antar's work has been shown in numerous exhibitions including The Sharjah Art Foundation, 2012; Sharjah Biennial 10, 2011; the New Museum, New York, 2009; Sharjah Biennial 9, 2009; Tate Modern, London, 2008; the Centre Pompidou, Paris, 2006; La Cabane, Palais de Tokyo, Paris, 2005; Taipei Biennial, Taiwan, 2008. Aref El Rayess was born in Aley, Lebanon where he started painting at the tender age of eleven. From 1948 to 1957 the artist travelled between Senegal and Paris where he studied art at the Academy of Fine Arts, and the studios of Fernand Leger, Andre Lhôte, and La Grande Chaumière. In 1957 he returned to Lebanon and with the help of Roger Caron opened a studio and an atelier of Aubusson tapestries. In 1959 after an exhibiting at the Italian Cultural Centre he was offered a scholarship to study in Italy. He spent four years in Italy and in 1963 the Lebanese government commissioned him to produce two sculptures to represent Lebanon at the New York World Fair. El Rayess spent two years in the USA working alongside with Expressionist artists and intellectuals.

*The nomadic artist, who toured Africa, North America, Europe, and the Gulf, acquired from his travels a unique style. He collaborated with Nicolas Nammar to establish the Institute of Fine Arts at the Lebanese University in 1963, teaching there from 1966 until 1980 after his return from the USA. El Rayess was not only a multidisciplinary artist, but he was also an astute thinker and keen observer. Inspired by Druze doctrine and its esoteric notions of mysticism, he believed in the interconnectivity of the universe, man, and time. Much like the work Espace, Homme Machine his works tackled themes of humanity, nature, and identity, denouncing injustice, materialism, and the superficiality of nationalism in the Global South.*

The reserve price represents the threshold confidentially established between Ans Azura and the Seller below which the Property may not be sold. Bidders acknowledge that any sale is conditional on the reserve price being reached and that, if the reserve price agreed with the Seller is not reached, no bid will be accepted. Bidders will be informed about the satisfaction of this condition immediately after the last bid for the Property is placed.*

Bidders and Buyers are solely responsible to comply with any such regulations and to obtain any licences, permits or authorisations required thereunder and accept that they will not have the right to cancel the purchase of the Property or to delay the payment of the full Purchase Price and applicable Buyer’s Expenses if they fail to obtain export or import licences, permits or any authorisations.

4.13 Bidders and Buyers accept that technical problems beyond Ans Azura’s reasonable control may occur while using the Online Platform. 8.3 The Buyer acknowledges that the artist resale royalty may be subject to withholding tax to be determined on a case-by-case basis. The Buyer undertakes to bear such withholding tax if, according to the applicable law, the Buyer is liable to pay it and also accepts that Ans Azura may elect to pay such withholding tax on its behalf.
